About the Seminar:

Socio-economic issues in pollution management across India pose significant challenges to sustainable development. The detrimental impact of pollution disproportionately affects vulnerable communities, exacerbating existing socio-economic disparities. Health consequences, such as respiratory ailments and increased healthcare costs, burden those least equipped to cope. Livelihoods dependent on agriculture and traditional industries suffer, leading to unemployment and economic instability. Urbanization exacerbates pollution levels in cities, affecting quality of life and hitting the urban poor hardest. Effective governance, equitable policies, and community engagement are crucial to address these issues. Education and awareness play a vital role in empowering communities to adopt sustainable practices. Tackling these socio-economic issues is essential to foster a healthier and more equitable future for India. The present seminar is an attempt to address many more such issues and challenges.

A few subthemes as starting points for the seminar are :

- Health Impacts and Environmental Justice
- Economic Costs and Productivity
- Livelihoods and Employment
- Urbanization and Pollution
- Rural Pollution and Agriculture
- Governance and Policy Interventions
- Education and Awareness
